Zona Franca-BCN. Cogenerative design strategies for a sustainable urban metabolism

activitat Taller Internacional - Intensive Programme UE tema The major aim of the workshop is the tooling of urban metabolism as key element in the production and design of new city scenarios. The exploration of the inter-relations between the city support networks (water, energy, food, mobility and construction) raises relevant questions about the cogeneration of urban flows as potential design strategy at different scales. Observing Zona Franca Area, new infrastructures combining individual and collective mobility, heating and cooling, water recycling and the redistribution of different flows can provide a new ground where new typological mixtures, hybrid city fabrics, and public spaces take place. Methodologically structured in a two-week “research by design” intensive course, the first week concentrates on the potential strategies of co-generative design and the second on the exploration of urban models and proposals. A final presentation of works will lead to a debate on the potential of cogeneration as design strategy.
